Wim Botha: Still Life with Discontent

Wim Botha's art is a study in contrasts: his pieces are simultaneously sacred yet profane, heavy yet light, and stable yet unsettled. Through his varying materials and subject matter, Botha explores weighty issues of history, status, power, and religion. A focus on art history is of particular prominence—the artist channels traditional sculptural busts and motifs, though Botha's take on classical or conventional art history is blurred, deconstructed, or fractured. Neither "still" nor "content," Botha's forms and materials are dynamic, marked, and in motion. Repetitively interrogating the symbols and sources of religious, cultural, and political power, his works celebrate the anxiety of influence while resisting fixed interpretation.

Truth or Dare: Reality Show

Highlighting uncertainty and contradiction, the artworks featured in Truth or Dare: A Reality Show emphasize the importance of questioning both knowledge and belief by utilizing illusion to entice, entertain, and explore the terrain between fact and fiction, presence and absence, reality and imagination. The suspension of disbelief is invoked in works that simulate games, maps, and tricks of the eye and hand—not to deceive, but to engage and connect, offering playful and prescient critiques of how and where we search for knowledge, meaning, or value. Facing continuing global strife, political instability, and economic disparity, the artists included in Truth or Dare speak truth to power through unconventional, often playful juxtapositions of imagery and materials.
